divide the team in couples, with group A playing the customers and group B playing the service reps. The people in Group A play angry customers. They are either handed a certain complaint, or can think of one themselves (think ridiculous complaints, e.g. "the water was too wet"). Also, they are given a certain goal - to get a big refund, for example. The service reps in Group B are given the task to resolve the situation.

6 Fun and Powerful Training Games for Customer Service Teams

So, come up with appropriate role-play customer service scripts for greeting your guests aka sales prospects. For teaching purposes, have the trainer play the customer service representative first, while the trainee plays the customer, and then reverse roles for practice.

Act out suitable situations: For instance, to greet a customer who just entered a retail store, acknowledge her immediately by making eye contact, smiling and saying, "hello" or "good day" in a cheery tone.
